Folks, I run an undergraduate program on organizational behavior that includes a course, Cross-cultural Dynamics. Because of a change in textbook services policy I have just been told that I need to find a new text for the course that has an EBook option that can be embedded in online programs

I have been using a cultural psychology text which is a great resource but students find it overwhelming in our one month, online delivery format... As many of the folks who take the class are in management and business they look for more direct applications of the concepts into their workplace contexts.

Any ideas?

Hi Maureen (and anyone else looking for a fabulous textbook on Cultural Psychology)

Check out Robyn M. Holmes' text titled "Cultural Psychology: Exploring Culture and Mind in Diverse Communities." It really is a gem. And available as an Etextbook.

https://www.amazon.com/Cultural-Psychology-Exploring-Culture-Communities/dp/0199343802/ref=sr_1_1?dchild=1&keywords=Robyn+M.+Holmes&qid=1612471984&s=books&sr=1-1

Warm regards,

I have taught "cross-cultural management" to international students [mostly from Mainland China] for the past 7 years and used successive editions of this text: https://www.amazon.com/Cross-Cultural-Management-Essential-David-Thomas/dp/1506340709/ref=sr_1_1?dchild=1&keywords=david+thomas+cross-cultural&qid=1612497954&s=books&sr=1-1 Given your students' business interests, Maureen, you may explore this text for possible use. With regards, Michael

Well, my textbook on Research Methods in Indigenous Contexts is not only directed to researchers, as the title might suggest, but to anyone working with non-industrialised cultures. It is very application-oriented and basically explains the relevant UN standards from a psychological perspective. Many university libraries provide it as an EBook as part of SpringerLink.

I hope you will find this useful.
