

Beals, Ann Marie
beal0950@mylaurier.ca

Ann Marie Beals (they/them) is a Two-Spirit Indigenous-Black L'nuwey – a mixed-blood African Nova Scotian and First Nation Mi'kmaq who hails from Mi'kma'ki territory of the Wabanaki Confederacy. Ann Marie is a graduate student at Wilfrid Laurier University, under the mentorship of Dr. Ciann L. Wilson and all their relations and ancestors. Ann Marie is a storyteller working on the ProclaimingOurRoots.com (POR) project. As well, they examine Indigenous and Black representation in high school curricula, within a critical decoloniality lens. Stories from the POR project revolve around Indigenous-Black identity and relationships with Indigenous and Black communities, and Truth and Reconciliation. Ann Marie's research explores the health and wellbeing of Indigenous-Black communities in revealing the effects of colonial legacies of oppression and violence, ongoing structural inequities, and lack of acknowledgement of Indigenous-Black identity in the Canadian settler nation-state. Ann Marie shares Indigenous-Black People's voices in stories of resilience, strength, self-assertion, and consciousness-raising. These sacred stories explore the lived experiences and knowledges of the health and wellbeing of Indigenous-Black communities.

If you would like to find out more about Ann Marie's research or work, please email at:
beal0950@mylaurier.ca

Wela'lin