Bio

Estevão Rafael Fernandes teaches in the Social Sciences Department at Federal University of Rondônia in Brazil, and currently holds the Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professor at Brown University. He is the author of dozens of articles published in academic journals in Brazil, Colombia, Poland, the United States, Venezuela and Portugal (available here: <https://independent.academia.edu/estevaofernandes>). As a coordinator of the Amazonian Laboratory of Studies in Latin America at the University of Rondonia in the Brazilian Amazon, he develops research on topics such as indigenous peoples, postcolonialism, coloniality and queer studies. He is currently working on the effects of colonization on indigenous sexualities in Brazil and Latin America. On this subject he is the author of two books: Existe índio gay? (Brazil Publishing, 2019) and Gay Indians in Brazil (Springer, 2017). He is now working on two other books about native queerness in Latin America. Now he is developing his research about suicide among queer young natives in Brazil.
